The Pan-American Games (1967) Society wishes to acknowledge the financial help and encouragement received from the municipal, provincial and federal governments for the Pan-American Games held in Winnipeg during the summer of 1967. In particular, our thanks go to the Hon. Judy LaMarsh, the Federal Minister of Health and Welfare when our negotiations for financial help began, to her successor, the Hon. Allan MacEachen, to the Hon. Mitchell Sharp, then Minister of Finance, to Premier Roblin of Manitoba, and the Hon. Obie Baizley, Provincial Minister of Labour, Winnipeg's Mayor Stephen Juba, and to all other members of the three levels of government who helped to make the games possible.

In addition, the Pan-American Games (1967) Society also wishes to thank the thousands upon thousands of Canadians who helped to make the Games "the best ever". Many of these people worked as volunteers for years before the Games. Some even took their annual holidays during Games time to continue their work or to be spectators. Others came from the most distant parts of our great country to see the greatest sports spectacle ever held in Canada, to cheer on participants and to revel in the exciting atmosphere generated by international sport at its best.

Foreword

This is the story of the Fifth Pan-American Games. While it is told in a few pages, behind it lies a great deal of work by a great number of people.

Winnipeg is the smallest city to have staged the Pan-American Games and it was recognized from the start that we should not try to compete on the basis of the magnificence of facilities or lavishness of arrangements. It was our intention rather to provide basic facilities, backed by effective organization, so that the athletes could compete under as favorable conditions as obtainable anywhere, with a minimum of the irritations, annoyances and mistakes that often surround events of this type. We insisted that the participants be comfortably housed and well fed and that there be adequate transportation. Furthermore, and by no means the least of our aims, we wanted all visitors to feel so welcome that they would leave our Games with pleasant memories of an athletic event well-run under excellent conditions amidst friendly and hospitable people. If this was achieved, and we believe in large measure it was, then it was due to the splendid work done first by a nucleus of key volunteers, backed by a small staff and ultimately supported by over 9000 additional volunteers, and last but by no means least by the enthusiastic and warm-hearted participation of the citizens as a whole.

Like all organizing committees faced with the task of preparing for an international athletic event of this magnitude we had many ideas but very little previous experience. We did, however, establish three principles which were to be the theme of our endeavors: first, that the athletes themselves have a first class athletic competition in a pleasant and friendly atmosphere; secondly, that this add to the prestige of this city and country, prove our ability to handle an event of this size and identify Canada as a land of hospitable and progressive people; thirdly, that all those involved in running the Games, while called upon to work hard, were to have fun and enjoy themselves doing it.

Our belief that we achieved these objectives was strengthened by the action of the International Olympic Committee in awarding the Olympic Cup to the Pan-American Sports Organization for the organizing and running of the 1967 Games.

It may well be that Winnipeg's example will encourage other smaller cities and countries to hold these and other international games, knowing that success does not necessarily depend on size or material assets.

History

Sports enthusiasts from the western hemisphere discussed the Pan-American Games for many years before the first Games actually came into being at Buenos Aires in 1951, saying that such Games would build new and closer bonds among the nations of the Americas and would give the amateur athletes in these countries added international competition between each Olympiad.

The Argentine Olympic Committee took the lead in calling a congress of the 21 countries of the western hemisphere in 1940. Sixteen National Olympic committees sent representatives to the meeting and it was decided to hold a Pan-American Games every four years beginning in 1942. World War II made it impossible to hold these games as scheduled and there were one or two other false starts before the first Pan-American Games were finally opened nine years later.

Nineteen sports were included in the first Pan-American Games, February 25 - March 8, 1951, with added competition for women in athletics, fencing, swimming and tennis. In Mexico City, March 12 - 26, 1955, twenty-one countries took part in 19 sports with volleyball and synchronized swimming replacing polo and yachting. Four years later in Chicago, yachting was added to the nineteen 1955 sports and 24 countries entered 2161 athletes, including 298 women. 24 countries were entered in 22 categories in 1965 at Sao Paulo, Brazil.

In Winnipeg, 29 countries entered athletes in a program which included baseball, boxing, cycling, judo, rowing, shooting, soccer, football, water polo, weightlifting, wrestling, and yachting for men, and athletics, basketball, equestrian, fencing, gymnastics, swimming and diving, tennis and volleyball for both men and women. In addition, synchronized swimming and canoeing were included as "exhibition sports."

Participation and performance have steadily improved since the Pan-Am Games first began and officials and athletes from all parts of the Americas are enthusiastic about the standards attained in the past 16 years and the promise of even more exciting contests in the future.

Symbols

The traditional five colored, interlacing circles of the Olympic symbol represent the ties among the world's five major continents. The motto is "Citius, Altius, Fortius," "Swifter, higher, stronger."

The colors of the Olympic rings, at least one of which appears in the flag of every country on the five continents, are repeated in the circles of the Pan-American Games symbol which features the Olympic torch and the motto, "America-Espirito-Sport-Fraternite", which, written in the four major languages of the western hemisphere, English, Spanish, Portuguese and French, means "the American spirit of friendship through sports."

Winnipeg Wants The Games

The staging of the Fifth Pan-American Games was the realization of a dream that saw its first glimmerings in 1958 when Mayor Stephen Juba charged a seven man exploratory committee with the task of determining whether it was possible for Winnipeg to consider hosting such an event. Once the committee had reported that the plan was feasible, an initial, unsuccessful bid was registered in Chicago in 1959 for the 1963 Games. Sao Paulo, Brazil, was given the nod on that occasion but the Winnipeg delegation was so encouraged by PASO's response to its bid that work began immediately on the presentation which was made four years later in Sao Paulo and which won the Games for Winnipeg!

Winnipeg Gears Up

Winnipeg has the Games!

As the jubilant word of the city's success flashed across the telegraph wires from Sao Paulo, thought was already being given to the thousands upon thousands of jobs that would have to be undertaken and the hundreds of volunteers who would be needed before the opening day of the Fifth Pan-American Games.

Mr. Culver Riley, a prominent businessman and well-known sports enthusiast was elected to head up the Games in a volunteer capacity and Mr. James Daly was appointed Executive-Director. These two men were both members of the Management Committee which was charged with the overall responsibility for the Games. All of the members of this nine-man group were well known to Winnipegers — they were business as well as community leaders — and they were determined that the Games Winnipeg hosted would be the best ever.

The Management Committee put in thousands of hours of work over the four years between the closing of the 4th Games in Sao Paulo in 1963 and the official opening of the 5th Games in Winnipeg. Working closely with the Management Committee were the 16 other men and one woman who, along with the nine Committee members, made up the National Executive Council.

Five of the men on the Management Committee and the National Executive Council headed up the five main boards of the Games: Morris Neaman, Finance; W. J. Hopwood, Sports; J. S. McMahon, Facilities; D. C. Groff, Organization and W. A. Neville, Promotion.

It was these boards which mapped out the strategies and mastered the details that made the Games such a success. Each board enlisted the help of scores, even hundreds of volunteers, to work on the myriad of committees which made up the total Pan-American Games (1967) Organization.

Total Community Involvement

The eminent historian, Arnold Toynbee, once summed up six volumes of history by saying "a great country is measured by the way it responds to a great challenge."

The response of the Canadian community to the challenge of the Pan-American Games can be compared to this measure of a great country, and the way this response was made is now an integral part of Canada's history.

In 1967, our Centennial year, when the search for a "national identity" was occupying the minds of many Canadians, the citizens of Manitoba demonstrated their identity most emphatically to athletes and other visitors from around the world. Never had the Pan-American Games been organized in quite this way; never had an entire Canadian community been asked to participate in such an event; never had the Canadian man on the street been given such an opportunity to demonstrate his hosting qualities.

Under the giant magnifying glass of international sport, the centre of Canada was put to a test and exposed to the gaze of the world. The entire community came through with flying colours and the concept of "Total Community Involvement" (TCI) proved to be a workable idea.

From the offices came the business and professional people with their merchandising ideas and methods of communication; from the halls of learning came those with particular teaching abilities and experience in organizing; from the factories came the workers and union organizers who turned their skills and techniques to the problems of a major sports festival; from living places great and small came the hordes of men and women who were to turn Greater Winnipeg into one large and friendly household.

From all these places and many more came the warp and weave, the giant mosaic, that made visitors and athletes alike realize that our community is a unique corner of the world. The friendly enthusiasm our guests met was a reflection of the true Canadian spirit, given a challenge and an opportunity to display itself.

James Daly,
Executive-Director,
Pan-American Games (1967) Society.

"T.C.I."

Thousands upon thousands of Manitobans responded to the Pan-American Games Society's call for Total Community Involvement. As the lists of jobs to be done mounted so did the numbers of volunteers. Doctors, lawyers, dentists, accountants, engineers, business executives, secretaries, soldiers, University and high school students, clerks and housewives all came forward to offer their services and to tackle the thousands of details which had to be worked out by the community. Some took Spanish lessons, others concentrated on Portuguese; dozens learned how to score complicated events; hundreds offered to work as parking attendants, ushers, linesmen, seamstresses, telephone operators or official hosts or hostesses — the Pan-Am Games Society named the jobs and Winnipeggers volunteered for them!

For months before the Games actually opened, one group of women came into the main office two or three evenings a week to help get out press releases, stuff or address envelopes or to keep mailing lists up-to-date. Secretaries gave up their noon hours to take minutes at various committee meetings and teenagers organized cheer leading sections for each of the visiting teams, complete with original cheers and chants of encouragement.

One unique way in which Winnipeggers responded to the Games was the Metro Radio Network. For the first time in the history of the city, the four private radio stations, CKRC, CJOB, CKY and CFRW, joined forces to keep all of the listeners on all stations fully informed. No one station could have adequately staffed the Games — the four did an outstanding job locally and by providing service for out-of-town stations also kept thousands of listeners in other cities up-to-date on results.

Such T.C.I. was not restricted to Greater Winnipeg alone. The enthusiasm was infectious and spread to the out-of-town sites at Gimli, Carman and Portage la Prairie.

PARTICIPATION OF WOMEN

The Fifth Pan-American Games set precedents in many ways — it was the best attended, attracted the most athletes, resulted in the most new records and so on — but the precedent it set with its use of women as umpires and officials was probably one of the most important of all and will affect international sports for years to come. Marilyn Redekop of Winnipeg made international volleyball history when she was umpire for the men's match between Canada and Mexico, the first time that a woman had ever been one of the two major officials in such a game. In a women's game the same day, Marilyn Hunnings of Vancouver repeated the performance.

The track and field events also saw a large number of women taking part in an official capacity and the swimming competitions had as many qualified women-times as men.

Miss Kathleen Richardson was the only woman on the National Executive but each of the scores of committees which were formed to take care of a particular segment of the Games had women as secretaries and, in many instances, also as sub-committee chairmen or members-at-large.

Torch Relay

The traditional torch relay took on added excitement as 15 native Canadians, representing various Indian tribes, were chosen to run the torch from St. Paul, Minnesota to Winnipeg for the opening ceremonies. The torch used at the Sao Paulo games four years previously was lit at a special sunset ceremony on the Hill of Stars where Aztec priests once presided over ancient sun rituals in what is now Mexico City, (the present home of PASO headquarters) and carefully transported to Winnipeg by CPA and then to St. Paul, the capital of Minnesota and the city chosen to represent Sao Paulo. The young Indian lads ran the torch 500 miles to Winnipeg at an average of 10 miles per hour — 80 miles a day — and arrived right on time at the stadium where 20,000 people were jammed in to watch the opening ceremonies. Lee Southern, an outstanding athlete and student at the University of Manitoba received the torch from the last relay runner and ran up the traditional long flight of stairs to proudly light the main torch and open the Games.

Opening and Closing Ceremonies

"On behalf of the Queen, who sends her greetings, I have the honour to declare the 5th Pan-American Games open." Thus, a rain-soaked Prince Philip officially opened the greatest sports spectacle ever held in Canada and signalled the release of 2500 doves, symbolizing peace and goodwill.

As the Prince spoke and the birds rose into the skies above the Winnipeg Stadium the heavy rains which had been pounding the city all day eased, and the sun broke through heavy cloud for a moment of brilliance. The thousands of umbrellas that had dotted the stands went down and cheers of welcome for the athletes poured from more than 20,000 rain drenched throats.

The rain had damaged the musical instruments of the bands taking part, drenched the musicians and saturated their uniforms but true to tradition, "the bands played on". The herald trumpets of the Vancouver Beefeaters Band sounded as the Pan Am and Olympic flags were hoisted up the poles; five jet planes of the Golden Centennaires of the Royal Canadian Air Force streaked over the stadium leaving brightly colored lines of smoke behind them; the three-hundred-voice choir dressed in white at one end of the stadium sang as it had never sung before and athletes from each of the participating countries paraded into the Stadium, proudly marching behind the flag of the nation they represented. The placards for each country were carried by 36 high-school girls chosen for their outstanding scholastic ability and outfitted in special red and white uniforms.

The rain had been falling heavily as the athletes slogged into the stadium and was still falling as the official party arrived. Prince Philip jumped out of the closed sedan which had carried him, Prime Minister Pearson and officials of the Province of Manitoba to the stadium and got into an open convertible for a slow turn around the full oval of the stadium. He put his hat on the seat and stood and waved at the cheering thousands, rain running down his nose and dribbling off his ear!

The athletes heard Prince Philip say, "There is too much hatred in the world, but here in Winnipeg, you, the athletes, have a chance to demonstrate amity and peace for all mankind." He made his speech in both French and English and even threw in "a dash of Spanish."

Scores of newspapers around the world waxed poetic about the opening ceremonies, and particularly about the Prince's unconcern over the weather. Stories appeared in papers from the 5500 circulation Knickerbocker News of Albany, New York to the 209,000 circulation Oakland Tribune of Oakland, California. As Jim Coleman, the dean of Canadian sportswriters said, "Prince Philip came 8,000 miles to stand in a rainstorm. In so doing he reflected the spirit of Winnipeg throughout that long wet afternoon. He stood there, soaking wet, and pretended he didn't even know it was raining."

Music played a big part in the opening festivities. The spectators thrilled to the sight of a special Pan-Am March, composed by Percy Faith, being played by the massed bands: 17 Wing RCAF Band; Cameron Cadet Corps; Heather Belles Pipe Band; Fort Garry Army and Navy Pipe Band; HMCS Chippewa Pipe Band; RCAF Training Command Band; Royal Winnipeg Rifles Band; RCHA 3rd Regiment Band; Vancouver Beefeaters Band.

As the march ended, the flag bearers from each nation formed a semi-circle around Sandy Gilchrist, the Canadian swimmer, as he took the Pan-American oath on behalf of all competitors. "In the name of all competitors, I promise that we will take part in these Pan-American Games, respecting and abiding by the rules which govern them, in the true spirit of sportsmanship, for the glory of sport and the honour of our teams."

At the closing ceremonies the official flags were gently lowered, and handed on in an impressive ceremony to the officials of Cali, Colombia, who had undertaken the task of hosting the 6th Pan-American Games in 1971. As the flags came down and the Pan-Am torch was extinguished, thousands of Winnipeggers felt a surge of sadness, as they realized that one of the greatest events in their lives had come to an end. The Games they had worked so hard to prepare for, had attended with such regularity and applauded with such enthusiasm, were over — the torch had been thrown to another city, in another country and the fifth Pan-American Games were already a part of history.

When the Pan-American Games (1967) Society was formed and a number of citizens were asked to constitute it and run the Games they did so on the understanding that the three levels of government who had applied for the Games would provide financing to an adequate standard, and after considerable negotiating between the Federal, Provincial and Civic governments a satisfactory financing formula was evolved. The final results showed total expenditure for the construction of facilities and operating expenses of $7,138,981. Total revenue was $1,058,363 and the final net cost was $6,080,618. In accordance with the cost-sharing agreement this was paid for as follows: Government of Canada $2,250,000, Province of Manitoba $2,560,308, City of Winnipeg $1,270,309. The statement shows the breakdown of expenditures and revenue.

OFFICE ADMINISTRATION

A small administrative office was set up for the Pan-American Games (1967) Society in February of 1964 with James Daly as Executive Director and Allison Vinnell as office manager. They initiated facilities planning with architects and engineers; took part in financial negotiations with the three levels of government concerned and worked with the National Executive Council, the Management Committee and the five main boards: Facilities, Finance, Organization, Promotion and Sports, as well as with a government co-ordinating committee. These staffers also worked out a basic bookkeeping system and purchase requisition procedure for the committees; prepared interim reports for the P.A.S.O. meetings in Tokyo in 1964 and Mexico City in 1965; began a Speakers Committee to handle all of the requests for speakers; replied to tourists who wrote asking for information on the Games and prepared mailing lists of contacts in amateur sports, media and government circles around the world.

PAN-AM GAMES EVENTS

PAN-AMERICAN GAMES WINNIPEG CANADA 1967

JULY 22 TO AUGUST 7

In 1966 the office was moved to larger quarters and the staff was increased to handle committee preparations. By June of 1967 there were 25 people on staff and office hours were stretching out to 14 hours a day. During the period immediately prior to and during the Games satellite offices were set up at the Tourist Accommodation Centre, Press Headquarters, Operations Headquarters and Village, the two ticket offices and the ticket control office. Personnel at these places totalled 82.

Staff was cut drastically within a month after the Games ended and after the audited statement was prepared in April of 1968 there was only one person kept on staff to gather material for the history of the Games.

As one example of how the work load grew, 196 cheques were issued in the first year of the office's operation, 327 during the second year, 5502 in the third and 6428 in the fourth.

Mail was a big problem. Although everything was sent "airmail first class" some letters were never received and others were returned up to six months after mailing. The entry forms for Costa Rica were shipped air freight in May 1967 and were returned, undelivered, to the Organizing Committee in February of 1968 while a yachting bulletin, sent airmail first class to Venezuela, was returned, also undelivered, 12 months later.

Because of the poor mail service, it was necessary to contact many of the countries just prior to the Games by telegraph and during June and July of 1967 the telegraph bill ran to $4,000.

TICKETS

More than 2,000,000 tickets were needed to cover all of the events, some of which, because of limited seating capacity, had to be run off in as many as three competitions a day. A Ticket Committee was set up to order, sell and control the tickets and the local IBM office offered facilities at its data centre to help control the ticket orders and sales. The first and central Ticket Office was set up in April; a second came into being in July, three weeks before the opening of the Games.

A Pan-Am first was the Winnipeg Organizing Committee's scheme to sell advance ticket vouchers at $1.00 each and sales by committee members, volunteers, banks, trust companies and business firms totalled $150,021. The people who bought the vouchers were given the opportunity of buying tickets for the events of their choice in advance of the general sale. Once this advance sale was finished the IBM computers could give organizers accurate information as to which events were the most popular and which were going to need extra promotion. In some cases the data could be used to justify adjustments in the program which would result in additional ticket revenue.

In addition to vouchers and tickets, 5000 training site passes were also put on sale so that enthusiasts could watch competitors in practice. Each of these passes entitled the holder to attend any of the training sessions in a particular sport.

In all, $862,172.00 worth of tickets were sold, more than for any other Pan-American Games in history!

TELEVISION

When Winnipeg first knew in 1963 that it was to host the Games contact was made with the major U.S. networks re broadcasting rights for 1967. After discussing the situation with communication experts the Management Committee decided that it would be most efficient to have one of the two Canadian TV networks televise the Games, providing the equipment, staff and technical know-how and then sell the world rights to interested foreign broadcasters. After months of negotiations the CBC was chosen because it could provide wider coverage within Canada itself.

By this time ABC had obtained the 1968 Mexican Olympic rights and NBC and CBS were no longer interested in promoting anything which might add to ABC's audience the following year. Because of this, the actual television income amounted to only $75,051.00 — 10% of what could have been expected if the world rights had been sold early enough to have had enthusiastic bidding from the three major U.S. networks.

SOUVENIR BOOKLETS AND GAMES PROGRAMS

A local publishing firm prepared a souvenir program and guide book which proved to be a source of valuable information on both the Games and Winnipeg for the visiting athletes, tourists and media. After the Games, copies were distributed to people outside of Winnipeg to remind them of both the city and the Games and to give them an indication of what a great sporting event they had missed.

Obviously, no one printing company could prepare and print all of the individual sports programs needed at all the venues for all the competitions. Each Sports Committee was therefore made responsible for its own programs, designed from a formula set up by a special Program Committee. The printing firms involved met and co-ordinated printing and distribution and one individual was made responsible for all of the printing at the various sites to ensure proper distribution and effective handling of the many necessary changes in numbers and layout.

The Facilities Board's first task was to find out in detail what facilities already existed. Members soon discovered that $150 million worth of playing fields, gymnasiums, rifle ranges, tennis courts and so on were already being used in the Greater Winnipeg area.

The Board also had to decide what was needed to bring the existing facilities up to the requirements of the international governing bodies of the sports on the Pan-Am program and to plan for such new structures as the Pan-Am pool, track and field stadium and velodrome. New construction and renovations were both planned with international standards and requirements and ultimate public use after the Games kept in mind. Following much discussion and consultation the Facilities Board decided to order temporary seating where possible so that most of the money available could be spent on construction of an actual physical facility or playing field rather than on permanent stands.

Three architectural firms, Smith Carter Searle, Green Blankstein Russell and Moody Moore Associates formed "Associated Architects" to work with the Facilities Board; to co-ordinate a functional program of the facilities needed; to supervise construction at all sites; and to help estimate costs and appoint architectural firms, contractors and sub-contractors.

A few weeks before the completion date for all facilities the carpenters and building trades unions went on strike and construction work ground to a halt. The Pan-Am pool and the track and field stadium were still far from completed and the stands in the Winnipeg stadium were a massive, unfinished concrete form, soon to be exposed to the scrutiny of millions of TV viewers anxious to see the festive Opening Ceremonies.

The strikers were as anxious as anyone for Winnipeg " to put on a good show". After hours of meetings held by Pan-Am and government officials and representatives of the carpenters' union, the union members decided that while still officially on strike, individual members would work at the various venues as volunteers and complete their jobs.

The official contracts had been based on the estimated cost of labor and the contractors concerned agreed to turn the amounts affected by the strike action back to the union. The carpenters voted to make an even further contribution to the public good and turned the money involved over to the Children's Hospital. This unique expression of the spirit that prevailed in Winnipeg will long be remembered by amateur sportsmen everywhere.

PAN-AM POOL—$2,975,568.22

The Pan-Am pool, the most expensive of the new facilities, was the first enclosed swimming pool to be constructed in the Winnipeg area in more than 30 years.

Seventy metres long and 25 yards wide, the pool has a moveable bulkhead which can be set to mark a regulation 50 metre pool at one end with a water depth of more than 6 feet for competition swimming, diving and water polo, with a shallow pool at the other end suitable for warmup sessions or for instruction.

Included are three diving platforms — 2, 7, and 10 metres — sun deck, electronic scoreboard, touch boards, underwater music and lighting, locker rooms for 100 people and offices and weightlifting rooms.

WINNIPEG STADIUM—$408,938.40

A new grandstand was added to the existing Winnipeg Stadium — the site of the Opening and Closing Ceremonies, the Grand Prix de Nations and the major soccer and football games — to bring the total seating capacity to 25,000.

This grandstand replaced a temporary seating section with 3,900 permanent seats and was designed with ticket-selling and dressing room facilities underneath. A permanent scoreboard was built above this section and above that went a temporary tower and stairway for the traditional Pan-Am torch which burned brightly for the two weeks of the Games.

TRACK AND FIELD STADIUM

After looking into various suggestions the Facilities Committee gratefully accepted the University of Manitoba's offer of land for the needed track and field stadium and money to build dressing and meeting rooms, etc., under the grandstand. This meant that after the Games the million dollar facility would be used by university students as well as by other citizens of the province of Manitoba.

The 18 acre site is 780' X 1000' and has a 400 metre track encircling a regulation football field with permanent seating for 5000, temporary seating for 10,000 and 15' high earthen berms at either end for spectators.

Precise timing was assured by the installation of a 70' timing tower, accurate to 1/1000th of a second and capable of producing precision photos of the finish line 45 seconds after the runners hit the tape.

The decision was made to use, once permission was granted by the International governing body of track and field in London, the new Tartan track material, impervious to all kinds of inclement weather and to spikes, but never before used on an international level.

The almost maintenance-free Tartan proved its worth when competitions continued despite heavy rains on two days of the six day athletic program.

VELODROME—$426,938.97

After considering several possible sizes and discussing the possible after-use of the Velodrome, it was decided to build a 400 metre track which would have an infield large enough for soccer, field hockey and high school football.

The lighting was designed so that it could be focused either on the track or on the infield and 3000 permanent and 3000 temporary seats were provided. The track itself banked steeply at each end and was built of concrete rather than timber because concrete construction was slightly cheaper, more permanent and needed less maintenance.

Located adjacent to the Winnipeg Arena, the Velodrome has been entrusted to the management of the Winnipeg Enterprises publicly owned stadium complex.

OTHER FACILITIES

In addition to the major facilities undertaken by the committee, Butler buildings were bought from Armed Forces surplus for storage and warm-up space at the track and field stadium, and the rowing, yachting and equestrian sites.

Other expenditures:

$44,000 for new courts and stands at the Winnipeg Canoe Club for tennis competitions

$80,000 for boats, docks and clubhouses for the yachting events at Gimli

$82,000 for improved facilities at the Miller Road Shooting Ranges for the shooting trials

$7,500 for improvements at the Winnipeg Trap and Skeet Club for the shooting competitions

$75,000 for horse show and viewing stands at Assiniboia Downs and Bird's Hill Park for the equestrian events

$10,000 on improved facilities at the St. James Civic Centre for gymnastics and judo

$7,000 on improved boxing and wrestling rings, dressing rooms and showers at the Winnipeg Auditorium

Moveable basketball and volleyball floors for the Arena and additional stands for Alexander Park for soccer games.

(*Deceased, June 9, 1967)

The Promotion Board had to explain the hows, whys, whens and wherefores of the Pan-American Games to sports lovers and potential visitors all over the world.

In 1965, a master promotion plan was established through which awareness of the upcoming Games would be gradually built up over a two-year period. The plan was based on three main thrusts: advance promotion (which included all advertising media, printed promotional material, and special promotions); public information (press relations, news and feature releases, radio and television coverage, films, general public relations activities, etc); and tourist promotion (involving cooperation with government departments, transportation companies, hotels, travel agents, etc.). Early in 1967, press arrangements took on the status of a major committee.

The overall 1965 plan was followed fairly closely, subject to various modifications and additions dictated by circumstances. The volunteer group on the Promotion Board fluctuated somewhat and over the two-and-a-half years of the Board's existence some two hundred people were involved. Much of the day-to-day routines and responsibilities were carried out by the permanent staff of up to five people to the end of June, 1967 and considerably more, especially at Press Headquarters, from then until the end of the Games in August.

The Promotion Board felt that the greatest handicap it faced was living within the limitations of its budget. $220,000 was allocated to cover not only advertising space and time costs but also printed material, give-away items, salaries, travel expenses, and a host of other items. The demands for essential promotional material and staff expenses prompted the elimination of a proposed advertising campaign in regional editions of selected U.S. magazines in the first half of 1967. From the standpoint of ticket sales, however, the concentration of ticket promotion in the Winnipeg area and a few other carefully selected markets paid off.

The promotion of the theme, "Total Community Involvement" or "TCI", as it became known, was a major single contributor to the achievement of solid backing from the citizens of Winnipeg who moved from ignorance in 1964 to apathy in 1965 to mild interest in 1966 and finally to a state of tremendous enthusiasm by mid-summer 1967.

Fortunately, most of the sports included in the Games have national or international house organs or newsletters and information could be fed along these well-travelled arteries of communication to the amateur sports buffs. The general public was harder to reach with the story because "Pan-American Games" don't bring instant recognition, yet, as "Olympics" do. However, sports writers in major cities were usually interested in at least one of the sports on the Pan Am calendar and after being introduced to the Games through that sport's newsletters were ready for the reams of material sent out from Winnipeg to cover all aspects of the Games.

The Promotion Board did not have the necessary funds to give the Games world-wide exposure so initial promotion material was used primarily within a 800 miles radius outside of Winnipeg. As the Games came closer the big guns of promotion were turned on the people of Manitoba — who responded magnificently to the challenge.

THE CANADIAN PAN-AMERICAN GAMES SYMBOL

The key to the whole promotion campaign was the exciting new symbol drawn to represent Canada's hosting of the Games. Because of the importance of the symbol four of Winnipeg's leading designers were asked to submit to a Symbol Competition a design which would portray the fact that Canada was to be host to the 1967 Games. The winner was W. J. Mayrs, then Creative Director of MacLaren Advertising, Winnipeg, whose basic thinking was that "the design must communicate to the viewer one idea, that of a 'Canadian sporting event'". This idea was carried forth in the form of a stylized athlete in track shirt displaying Canada's maple leaf. The athlete had his arms outflung as a welcome to Canada, a visual registration to all non-English speaking people. Because the symbol was made up of simple circles, an arc and straight lines it was easily reproduced and soon became instantly recognizable to sports fans and the general public.

ADVANCE PROMOTION AND INFORMATION:

March 1965 marked the beginning of the avalanche of information sheets, news releases and feature stories that were to pour out of the Pan-Am Games office for the next 2½ years. The first press conference was called in July, 1965 to introduce the official symbol and from then until Games time, PAN-or-AM-a, [a periodic newsletter,] releases and features were sent to media, National Olympic Committees and sports governing bodies around the world; to North, South and Central American tourist agencies; to Canadian and American chambers of commerce; and to the Canadian embassies in South America and South American embassies in Canada, as well as to hundreds of individuals who asked for information.

From May, 1967 on, news conferences were held almost every week and stories sent out to keep local, national and international media aware of what was happening.

"PAN-or-AM-a" was first distributed in English to 4,100 addresses in February 1966 and subsequent issues went to as many as 8,800. The Spanish edition was issued in May of 1966 to 338 people and its circulation quickly grew to 940.

January 1966 was a busy month for the advance promotion people. 100,000 car decals were sent out locally; 500 postage meter slugs advertising the Games were sold so that the companies concerned could promote the Games for the next 18 months; and 100,000 four-colour pamphlets entitled "The Site of Excitement" were printed for distribution at conventions and to fill requests from all over the world. At the same time, a contract was taken out with a press clipping service. About 300 clippings a month came in during 1966. This was stepped up to 500 in January 1967, 600 by March, 900 in May, 1,600 in June, 2,650 in July and a high of 22,500 in August. In all, the service resulted in 31,170 clippings from Canadian media plus 25,000 from the U.S.A.

It was in January, 1966, too, that advertisements called for applications for licenses to use the Pan-Am symbol and other Games' licensable rights on articles to be sold in connection with the Games. Non-exclusive licenses to use the Pan-Am symbol on articles to be sold at, or in connection with the Games, were granted in 23 categories for everything from blouses to home movies, balloons, spoons and towels.

Suddenly the Winnipeg Pan-Am symbol popped up everywhere. A poster designed by Bernard Michaleski of Winnipeg won widespread acclaim both from the public and in design circles. 40,000 copies were sent to the Canadian Government Travel Bureau for distribution to its offices all over the Americas; to conventions; and to any individual or group asking for Pan-Am display material. The Royal Winnipeg Ballet went on a North American tour with Pan-Am splashed all over the sides of the dancers' official bus; a permanent display was set up at Winnipeg's International Airport to catch the interest of transients; a local hockey team travelling to competitions in Mexico was dressed in Pan-Am T-shirts and there were scores of other examples of promotion by individuals and groups who undertook to carry the message of the Winnipeg Games to other parts of the continent.

As part of the advance promotion highway billboards were rented in Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Des Moines and Omaha and 500,000 plastic lapel pins mounted on information cards were produced and distributed.

Winnipeggers going to national and international conventions were anxious to help and bombarded the office with requests for material to take with them. 1,000,000 copies of "Pan-Am Facts" in French and English were printed, many of them going to the Canadian Government Travel Bureau for distribution to travel agencies in the U.S.

The Promotion Board and its permanent staff provided information and escort services for journalists who came from all over the world to report on the preparations for the Games. Culmination of this work came in May, 1967, when a large group of U.S. sports writers came to Winnipeg under joint sponsorship of the U.S. Olympic Committee and the Pan-American Games Society to get a first hand look at facilities.

"D.A.P.":

Promotion Committee members who had seen other international competitions were determined that Greater Winnipeg should show its pride in the Games. To this end "D.A.P." came into being—the Decorator Aid Plan. A huge volunteer committee took on the job of contacting hundreds of local businesses, asking the firms to buy and display banners, flags, plaques, merchandise bags, place mats, airship balloons and anything else they could think of to show their interest and encouragement. Window banners were printed in English, French and Spanish and were made available to companies large and small.

More than 750 orders came in to D.A.P. and a month before the Games the whole city had taken on a festive welcoming air.

Private enterprise added its bit by imprinting the Pan-Am symbol on company stationery and carrying stories in employee publications, trade magazines and catalogues. Companies put the symbol on menu blanks, envelopes, signs and trucks; printed information on daily events on handbills; produced figurine wall plaques and show cards for dealers' stores and distributed banners to scores of locations around Greater Winnipeg.

SPEAKERS COMMITTEE:

While media near and far was being bombarded with promotional material and local companies were doing what they could to work up excitement the Pan-Am Speakers Committee was also busy, taking the word to audiences from one end of the country to the other. The first public mention of Winnipeg's interest in holding the Games had come in 1958 and brought about a storm of questions. Winnipeg hold such a spectacular? Impossible — or at least highly improbable.

But curiosities were awakened and suddenly local clubs and organizations wanted to hear more. A handful of sports enthusiasts took up the challenge and spoke whenever and wherever asked. More and more people began to think the whole idea had possibilities and by the time Winnipeg was awarded the Games, every club and organization in Manitoba had asked for more information.

Jim Daly alone gave more than 750 speeches in the five years before the Games and for some time it was only through such speakers that the Games could tell its story to the local residents. Although a large percentage of the speeches were given locally, Pan-Am speakers also appeared on platforms at conventions and meetings in other provinces and in many parts of the United States.

ADVERTISING POOL:

The advertising agencies in Winnipeg formed a pool to work with the Advance Promotion Committee. A special campaign was designed to give Greater Winnipeg firms a choice of 5 "package" deals whereby they could "inform and excite" the Greater Winnipeg public about the Games through paid advertising in newspapers, radio and TV and on outdoor posters and business cards. Companies were asked to buy "packages" to help relieve the limited promotion budget and let what money was available be used for external promotion and public relations.

Media agreed to minimum and/or special rates for this campaign so that in effect the Pan-Am Games and the sponsors got $5.00 worth of advertising for every $4.00 spent. In addition, special contributions were solicited for special advertising in trade journals, weeklies and so on.

PRESS HEADQUARTERS

The Royal Alexandra Hotel was designated as Press Headquarters and became the heart of an elaborate communications system as well as a "newsroom" for nearly 800 writers, photographers, broadcasters, technicians and cameramen. The mezzanine housed the headquarters office, results centre, printing department, main newsroom and photo pool office; the third floor buzzed with the teleprinters of the United Press International, Associated Press, Reuters, Canadian Press and the Agence France Presse. Reuters brought in three reporters and a deskman from London and reporters from New York and Venezuela while the French wire service sent a staff of 14 and used London as a relay centre and Paris as a dispatching point for coverage to Latin America. Associated Press had a large staff from New York supported by Canadian Press personnel.

Seventy typewriters, many with French or Spanish keyboards, were kept going 24 hours a day in the main press room. Reporters from the Latin American countries filed reports by CP/CN Telecommunications, Western Union, Commercial Cables and Canadian Overseas Telecommunications, all installed at headquarters. Rates ran from 7c to 14c a word with photos transmitted at $4 to $36 a copy. The Commonwealth countries such as Bermuda and Trinidad enjoyed the special Commonwealth "penny" rate of 2c a word.

Results of all events were rushed to press headquarters by telephone, teletype or messenger. The Manitoba Telephone System installed three switchboards at Minto Armories and one each at the Royal Alexandra and the rowing site along with 20 mobile telephones . . . all for press purposes.

Teletypes went into the track and field stadium, the Pool and the Winnipeg Arena to speed the results of the 10 sports held at these venues to headquarters. Judo and gymnastics results were relayed from the St. James Civic Centre by motorbike to the teletypes at the Arena and from there to Press Headquarters.

Results from other events were telephoned in or in case of weightlifting with its complicated scoring system, taken by car to headquarters.

36 people were on duty at the various sites to handle results. Five girls at headquarters received and edited them before the results went to the duplicating department. Then Boy Scout volunteers quickly filled the "pigeonholes" for newsmen. It took only 20 minutes from the time an event finished until 800 copies of the results were pigeonholed at Press Headquarters!

Because of the excellent service on results reporters found they could concentrate on the "color" and more personal side of the Games.

The Royal Alexandra, owned by the CPR, was due to be closed almost immediately after the Games and the railway was most co-operative in helping the hotel, which had a long history, "go out in a blaze of glory" as "the pulse of the press" for two weeks!

In all 376 writers and photographers from all over North America were given official press accreditation along with 135 from 16 countries in Central and South America and 26 from Spain, New Zealand, the Netherlands, Iceland, Italy, Hong Kong, Germany, France and England. A total of 26 countries were represented. Accreditation gave admission to events and to the playing fields under the restrictions outlined by the various sports committees. Only a limited number of people were issued the special identification needed to get into the press boxes.

At all venues volunteers, dressed in bright orange shirts, acted as "press stewards" to provide information or assistance to the accredited newsmen. These stewards also set up interviews, took athletes to various interview areas and worked at allocation of positions for the photo pool which was in effect at several of the venues. This pool was set up because of the scarcity of vantage points for photographers at some sites and the pool photographers assigned to these venues made all of their pictures available to anyone who wanted them. UPI, AP and Omega pictures were available at no cost on the understanding that a credit line be used.

ORGANIZATION BOARD

The Organization Board was charged, as one member put it, "with the responsibility for everything not covered by the Sports, Promotion, Finance and Facilities groups" and therefore it undertook such diverse tasks as arranging for all communications, accommodations and catering, reception, transportation, travel and language services. The Pan-Am Force, Security, Games programs, Medical Service and manpower also fell under the Organization Board's blanket of responsibility.

In actual fact, the Organization Board made the arrangements for the athletes to get here, had them met, got them to the Villages and there provided them with good accommodations, excellent food and entertainment and well-equipped lounges and facilities for relaxation.

The actual statement of objectives for the Organization Board reads as follows:

"To co-operate with the National Executive Council and with the "Sports", "Facilities", "Finance" and "Publicity and Promotion" Boards in making the 1967 Pan-American Games an unqualified success;

To promote International Goodwill with the member countries of the Pan-American Congress by Acting as "perfect hosts" to competitors, officials and visitors alike;

To bring credit to Winnipeg, Manitoba and Canada as a friendly, thoughtful and efficient people, anxious to earn the friendship and respect of our Pan-American neighbours.

AND IN PARTICULAR TO PROVIDE

1. Adequate and pleasant lodging, food and services;
2. Efficient transportation and communications;
3. A high standard of medical and first aid facilities and service;
4. A hosting service to include every nicety from arrival to departure;
5. Decorations, Ceremonials and Music that will appropriately honour guests and contribute to the occasion;

All of these things to be done within the financial budgets laid down and properly amended from time to time."

The Organization Board set up six "committee groups" (Housing and Catering, Transportation, Communications, Medical and First Aid, Hosting and Decorations, Ceremonial and Music) as a means of allocating work so that already busy people would not be too heavily burdened with responsibilities and that the experience of working for "The Games" would be both pleasing and rewarding. The chairmen of the six committees and the Executive committee made up the "Management Committee" of the Board and it was this group that was charged with the carrying out of the stated objectives. The Executive also had four "Committees of the Executive" — Budget, Finance and Purchasing, Legal Advisory, and Public Relations and Armed Services Liaison.

Each of the six committee groups established by the Board had its own Management Committee which in turn set up the individual committees needed to do a specific job.

SECURITY

The retired Chief of Police of the City of Winnipeg, Robert Taft, headed up the special committee charged with the security and policing of the Games and the co-ordinating of the security forces of the Armed Forces and of the various cities and municipalities in which Games events were staged or practiced. This committee worked with the Organization Board but was not included in any of the Groups. The committee dealt with such problems as lost and found, lost people, possible theft and pickpocketing, deaths and injuries and the control and protection of people and property. Information on the law of the land was prepared prior to the Games and sent to the various countries for distribution to athletes, officials and potential tourists.

Excellent co-operation from all areas in the community helped to cut the crime rate substantially throughout the Games, although many people had predicted an increase. Civic police forces extended their services to the patrolling of the Pan-Am Villages and the venues and a private security and investigation company and the Canadian Corps of Commissionaires were used for additional work for a total of 22,881 man hours at a cost of $60,614.00.

The security men used were not sworn in as peace officers and therefore law enforcement was still the responsibility of the constituted forces in each municipality. The security personnel had the task of preventing unauthorized entry, clearing and helping to keep the practice and competition fields clear, guarding dressing rooms, protecting equipment, directing and assisting the public and checking buildings.

TRANSPORTATION GROUP:

TRAFFIC CONTROL AND PARKING

Hundreds of volunteers were recruited to supervise the parking at all venues so that as many cars as possible could be squeezed into the available space.

Special parking areas were marked off at most of the sites for the cars with special identification stickers.

TRAVEL ARRANGEMENTS

Each sports committee decided which key officials, judges and members of the Jury of Appeal would be needed to help ensure the smooth operation of a particular sport and the Travel Arrangements committee made the necessary bookings. Scores of top men were invited from all over the world and many arrived before the Games opened to conduct special officiating clinics so that there would be conformity in officiating.

A travel agent was appointed to make all arrangements and itineraries were prepared and distributed to several committees and individuals so that everyone was alerted as to expected arrivals. Airlines personnel worked with volunteers to help facilitate arrangements for the various delegations and even set up an office at the Village to be on hand to deal with problems or questions.

When Winnipeg bid for the 1967 Games there was a suggestion that a travel allowance be made to all countries (except the U.S. and Canada) so that every eligible country could send at least a token team. The Organizing Committee agreed to credit 15% of the cost of a return ticket from the capital city of any of the countries to Winnipeg against the accommodation costs charged to each National Olympic Committee. The allowance went only to athletes and was not granted to team officials.

LOCAL TRANSPORTATION

Civilian volunteers and military transportation teams provided all of the required local transportation. A chief despatcher had an office in the main Village and scores of cars, military vehicles and school buses, borrowed or rented for the duration of the Games, were parked in an adjacent compound with easy access to fuel pumps, workshops, waiting rooms for the civilian drivers and parking area for committee members and volunteers. More than 1000 Winnipeggers volunteered as drivers. They worked in shifts from 7 a.m. to 10 p.m. transporting officials, athletes, luggage or equipment from one place to another. A service manager arranged for the maintenance of the cars and teenagers came in droves to wash the vehicles. A special fleet of cars was made available, with drivers, to PASO officials. 100 white convertibles were loaned to the Games as official cars.

In addition to the official Pan-Am vehicles, hundreds of citizens driving around the various sites stopped to talk to the athletes and willingly drove them anywhere they wanted to go.

All athletes, officials and VIPs were met by official cars or buses and taken with baggage and/or equipment to the respective villages. This meant almost round-the-clock attendance at the airport as many of the arrivals were between midnight and 7 a.m.

COMMUNICATIONS GROUP:

COMMUNICATIONS

The Communications Group was an integral part of the Organization Board with three working committees and two of its members designated as principal communications coordinators at Operations Headquarters during the Games. Because of the diversity of equipment and facilities the Group had to recruit knowledgeable volunteers, principally from the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Telecommunications Company and the Manitoba Telephone System.

The committees concerned roared into full gear 16 months in advance of the Games so that the members could work out engineering and programming delivery and ascertain the installations required.

Mobile telephones were installed in some official cars during the Games and ham operators were recruited to provide badly needed assistance in relaying messages to and from athletes and their families during the earthquake which took place in Venezuela during the competitions. These "hams" were also invaluable in passing on results of the cycle road races.

PAN-AM GAMES ADMINISTRATIVE TELEPHONE NETWORK

PAN-AM TELETYPE CIRCUITS

PAN-AM SPORTS COMMITTEE TELEPHONE NETWORK

C.B.C. RADIO & T.V. NETWORK

The committee reported that its association with the Canadian Forces proved to be its greatest asset as the Forces supplied experts in the area of field communications to assume responsibility for planning, installing and operating the radio nets for yachting, equestrian, cycling, marathon and shooting as well as the complex field telephone network operated by the events officials at the Track and Field Stadium.

The complete general telephone network furnished the Games with six switchboards, 280 central office trunk lines, some 600 telephones including a number of key telephone systems, 26 general mobile telephones, 20 pocket pagers and quantities of miscellaneous equipment.

By the first of May, 1967, the Administration Building at Fort Osborne Barracks had been set up as Operations Headquarters with the Headquarter Staff of the Military Support Force taking up quarters there. By July 10th the Communications networks were fully functional.

The Communications people also provided complete Public Address Systems at various venues; upgraded and supplemented the systems at others; and worked with the CBC to resolve with the Ceremonials and Music Group the technical complexities involved in the playing of recorded music at the various sites.

HOUSING AND CATERING GROUP:

PAN-AM VILLAGE

The 26 buildings at Ft. Osborne Barracks were loaned by the Department of National Defence as "homes away from home" for the majority of athletes and designated as "Pan-Am Village."

The Village was the headquarters for eating, training, accommodation and recreation and also had banks, a post office, telegraph and cable facilities, barber, tailor, seamstress, hospital and dental clinic, interpreter service and even a cabaret!

For a full week before the official opening local citizens were encouraged to watch the colorful ceremonies each morning when the flags of the newly arrived countries were raised for the first time at the main parade square of Selkirk Lines. These "flag raisings" were a most impressive sight and did much to stimulate added interest in what was yet to come.

The main Pan-Am Village and several satellite Villages handled more than 3000 athletes, managers, trainers and team officials. As no definite numbers were available in advance, certain satellite villages weren't set up until the athletes were actually arriving and teams were proving to be larger, in some cases, than anticipated.

The main Pan-Am village was at Ft. Osborne barracks. This housed 2346 athletes and officials. 339 more were in the Women's Village at the Manitoba School for the Deaf; 51 were billeted at Balmoral Hall, 245 were at University College and 196 were housed at St. John's-Ravenscourt School, and the other 107 were put up, along with 50 naval cadets, at the yachting site at Gimli, an hour's drive from Winnipeg on Lake Winnipeg. In all 3284 athletes and officials were accommodated.

The Villages were completely independent with everything possible provided for the convenience and comfort of the visitors. The Housing Group managed to supply everything from washers and dryers to lamps, 7 ft. beds, irons, chairs, blackboards and dozens of other items requested by the visitors.

The Elna Sewing Centre set up ten machines right in the Village, with operators available to sew numbers on athletes' shirts, alter uniforms and provide a repair and pressing service. Barber shops, too, were open in the North and South Village and hairdressing appointments were arranged when requested. A large office was given over to the Adidas and Puma Shoe companies to provide athletes with any shoe repairs and make any adjustments necessary for use on the Tartan track.

HOUSING

The Housing Committee arranged for accommodations for V.I.P.'s, other visitors, coaches, officials, managers and all sizes and shapes of athletes from the 7' 6" basketball player from Brazil to a 315 lb. American weightlifter.

Accommodation for visitors was set aside in local hotels, motels and private homes with about 20,000 housed nightly in commercial establishments. Close to 2000 of the homes volunteered and registered with the committee were used.

A Tourist Accommodation office was set up in February, 1967, with staff from the Chamber of Commerce and volunteers handling the first of the reservations. By June, the office was moved to larger quarters and more staff came from the provincial Department of Tourism. Later, four satellite information and accommodation booths were established on the outskirts of the city with direct telephone lines to the central offices.

Advance reservations were also handled for the VIP's who came to the Games. As the competitions came closer several sports committees found it necessary to invite experienced officials to help with final arrangements and ensure smooth operation of all of the athletic events and the Housing Committee often had to scurry around at the last minute to accommodate these men and women.

In all, more than 500 visitors were rated as VIPs — representatives of various countries or governments, the Olympic Committees, the governing bodies of the various sports or of the companies whose products were being used or tested.

CATERING

The Catering Committee had to feed more than 3000 athletes, coaches, trainers, grooms and officials for up to three weeks, making sure that they got the kinds of food and the quantities they were accustomed to and also provide plenty of variety. The visitors raved about the food service and said that it was the best imaginable.

Nearly 6000 calories per day per person were consumed and the caterers were astounded that athletes could eat like that and then perform at world class level.

The Organizing Committee stipulated that there would be no stinting or saving in any way where it might adversely affect the quantity or quality of food available. Twenty prominent volunteer food experts were recruited to work with the overall chairman and a permanent staff was hired three weeks before the Games actually began. Hundreds of high school and university students were hired as bus boys, dish washers, pot scrubbers, etc. giving a youthful air to the Pan-Am Village.

The headquarters for the food service was set up in the main Village and it was from there that the food co-ordinator and his assistant directed operations.

Tenders were called on supplies and the Catering officials were able to buy at keenly competitive prices; the food suppliers were extremely generous as to the amount of material they gave to the Games and in many cases took back at full credit unused deliveries.

Specially color-coded meal tickets were bought by the financial representatives of the competing countries. Each ticket entitled the holder to complete meal service.

A local caterer provided appetizing box lunches for athletes who preferred to eat at the practice or competition sites so that the regular messes wouldn't be overloaded.

Surveys of past Games were made and then menus were drawn up by the overall committee — menus high in protein, vitamin and minerals, with a wide choice of meat and fish, vegetables and fruits. All menus rotated and all had cold buffets which helped speed up the service line.

Quantities consumed were phenomenal: 32,000 lbs. of beef; 12,480 lbs. of turkey and chicken; 24,000 lbs. of fish and 30,120 lbs. of veal, lamb, ham, liver and bacon; 16,000 dozen eggs; 4,800 lbs. of cheeses; 27,000 gallons of milk (fresh or evaporated) and cereal cream; 72,000 lbs. of potatoes; 56,600 lbs. of other vegetables; 24,500 lbs. of canned and fresh tomatoes; 22,500 cans of juice; 2,000 dozen oranges and grapefruit; 65,055 lbs. of canned, dried fresh and frozen fruits; 12,000 lbs. of jams, marmalade, honey and jelly; 6,000 lbs. of cereals; 70,000 lbs. of bread; 26,000 lbs. of baking flour or prepared mixes; and 3,000 lbs. of baking powder as well as great quantities of 24 herbs and spices, gravy bases, flavorings, sauces and pickles.

Breakfast always included four varieties of juice; both cooked and dry cereal; scrambled, poached or boiled eggs; ham and bacon; choice of hot beverage or milk; toast, rolls, butter and honey and several kinds of fresh fruits.

Hours of Service

Lunch 11 a.m. — 2 p.m.

HOSTING GROUP:

RECEPTION COMMITTEE

Knowing that most of the athletes and officials would travel thousands of miles before arriving at Winnipeg's International Airport a system of whisking people through customs and immigration to their residences was given top priority by the Reception Committee. The group set up close liaison with the army and the Immigration, Customs and Health Departments and also tried to anticipate the wants and needs of the stranger arriving in Winnipeg. Every official visitor was given a special Pan-Am kit which was crammed with everyday necessities donated by national and local companies, as well as a complete map of the Greater Winnipeg area showing practise and competition sites and a general information booklet.

Although most athletes were expected to arrive by air, the Reception Committee's telephone number was displayed prominently at all rail and bus terminals.

Two full-scale dress rehearsals were arranged prior to the Games with Canadian soldiers representing the visitors. The organizers tried to plan for every possible contingency in these two rehearsals and because of this, the actual arrival of the teams went very smoothly. Twenty-four teenagers, ranging in age from 13 to 16, were named as hostesses and became the first Canadians to greet the visiting athletes, offering to help with luggage and generally making themselves useful.

The national anthem of each of the incoming countries was played as the athletes left the customs area and were led to their cars and buses.

Baggage was handled by Armed Forces personnel and the men on the Reception Committee. All Villages were color coded and large teams were sent colored baggage tags to affix to their baggage before leaving their home country. This meant that processing was speeded up and that the baggage could be loaded more quickly into waiting vehicles.

IDENTIFICATION

Athletes, visiting officials, committee members and the working press all had Polaroid ID cards with name, classification and picture affixed for identification. In all, 2800 cards were issued and armbands, ribbons and badges were also used as a means of identification. The cards used by the working press entitled them to free entrance to sites but other passes were needed for admittance to press boxes.

A special machine was installed at Pan-Am Village to take the athletes pictures so that their cards could be issued as soon as possible after arrival. These cards gave the competitors free transportation on the public transit system and entrance to the Villages and competition sites.

"Service passes" were made out by committee chairmen for people who were to perform specific duties at an event and Red Cross arm bands admitted medical and first aid people to all venues.

The Pan-Am Force wore white arm bands with the Pan-Am emblem on their right arms and special die-cards and colored ribbons were given to: International Olympic Committee representatives; the National Olympic Committee representatives; the Pan-Am Sports Organization personnel; the Organizing Committee members; the Sports Technical Delegates; the Honor Jury; the Jury of Appeal; the special guests and team attaches. These cards and ribbons admitted such dignitaries to all venues and Villages at any time.

Transportation stickers on cars and trucks and magnetic plates on VIP cars admitted the vehicles to reserved parking areas.

RECREATION AND ENTERTAINMENTS

With athletes housed at so many sites the recreation program for the Games participants proved to be rather difficult to organize.

However, an "International Cabaret" was set up in the main Village and it rocked with Go-Go dancing and entertainment nightly for three weeks. Winnipeg girls volunteered to act as dancing partners and general hostesses — a big drawing card for the predominantly male teams. The bands and the music changed every night, and the athletes rocked and rolled 'til closing time.

Athletes had access to T.V. sets, table tennis equipment, radios, games, swimming pools, souvenir shops and photo services at the various residences. Newspapers from several of the participating countries sent copies of their publications for distribution to the athletes to keep their teams in touch with "life at home."

Tours of the city and visits to homes were arranged; athletes were able to ride transit buses free; and were given passes to local theatres, ballet and concert events, golf clubs, bowling lanes, race tracks and car races. Rainbow Stage, Canada's largest outdoor theatre, put on a special preview of "Sound of Music" for the athletes and team officials.

PAN-AM FORCE

The Canadian Army, normally preoccupied with international peace-keeping duties, was kept busy during the Games fostering international goodwill by playing host to the athletes.

Fort Osborne Barracks, fifteen minutes from downtown Winnipeg, was turned into the Pan-American Village, and its 370 acres of immaculate lawns and gleaming buildings became an area for good comradeship and political and racial integration.

The Army worked side by side with civilians and was the central force behind much of the logistics and arrangements. Soldiers under the command of Lt. Col. John de Domenico spent months preparing the area as military hardware was stowed away and replaced by racks of javelins and other sports paraphernalia and twenty soldiers were given 80 hours of Spanish lessons.

The transport company, accustomed to manning jeeps and trucks, had soldiers shuttling athletes between buildings on the grounds and to practice areas in scores of school buses.

The efficient operation of the Village was a result of special exercises staged months earlier. The first, called "Exercise Buenas Dias" was a telephone battle to react to problems and situations that might arise during the Games. The second, "Exercise Hasta Manana," combined military and civilian personnel. One hundred soldiers represented arriving athletes and were put through the reception procedure at the airport. They carried luggage, wore civilian clothes and were not to speak English until an interpreter arrived.

The soldiers acted the parts to the hilt, arriving complete with missing passports. They lived in the barracks in their roles as athletes as the Pan-Am Force tried to anticipate what the needs of such athletes would be during the actual Games.

MANPOWER

All types of last minute requests for assistance were anticipated from various committees dealing with athletes and the Manpower Committee began months in advance to assemble the names of volunteers who were willing to donate their services in either a specific or a general area. In all, more than 9,000 were given specific jobs — all on a volunteer basis. If these volunteers had been hired the Pan-Am Games, 1967, would have cost many millions of dollars.

Through the Manpower and other committees, it was possible to absorb nearly everyone who wanted to help. The committees found that Winnipeg was full of people with unusual talents and that it takes an undertaking such as the Games to bring these talents to the fore.

BOY SCOUTS

Hundreds of young Boy Scouts from all over North America put in more than 25,000 hours of service at 23 different sports and were involved in 267 sports jobs and more than 11,000 hours and auto miles travelling to various sites. Three years before the Games opened the local Boy Scout officials met with Games Organizers to discuss the ways and means of Scout participation.

The Scouts lived in a special "Centennial Scout Village" in Birds Hill Park, and were kept busy parading winners to the podiums; carrying medals on cushions; controlling traffic in road races; ushering; helping timers and starters; handling shells and canoes in water sports; manning feeding and sponging stations for the Marathon and 50 Kilometer walk; retrieving balls in the volleyball and basketball competitions; distributing official results to media; moving jumps at the equestrian events; and serving drinks to the athletes at the various training centres.

Many of the young Scouts got to know participating athletes quite well during the Games, to the mutual benefit of both.

LANGUAGE SERVICES COMMITTEE

This committee decided that the providing of interpreters at the various sports events and practice sites would have top priority.

Originally, the group hoped to recruit volunteers for interpreting duties, but later it became necessary to hire resident interpreters for the Villages at the information centres, and at some of the venues. Fifteen interpreters were eventually hired for the three week period. However, 160 volunteer interpreters put in 5,000 hours of work during the Games, almost all of them making themselves available on a 24 hour a day basis.

The Language Services Committee greeted the teams at the airport, settled the athletes into the Villages and told them of the available social and recreational programs around town and also compiled sporting terms into a "Sports Dictionary." Copies of this book have been sent to Cali, Colombia, so that the 1971 Games Organizing Committee can make any needed corrections or additions.

MEDICAL SERVICES GROUP:

Hundreds of doctors, dentists, nurses, physiotherapists, ambulance orderlies, pharmacologists, and other medical personnel began to offer their services more than three years before the Games were to open. In all 20 Medical Services Committees and 22 Medical Sports Committees were formed to provide total medical, dental and paramedical services for all participating athletes and officials, emergency medical care for spectators; research projects involving athletes and the special two days Congress on Sports Medicine.

219 doctors and dentists contributed 2772 hours of time to the Games while 66 RN's were on duty for 494 hours. In addition 300 members of the St. John's Ambulance Brigade, 225 student and registered nurses and 175 St. John trained volunteers all helped where they could. First Aiders devoted 5500 hours on duty to the Games; the Manitoba Association of Physiotherapists manned five major physiotherapy centres; X-ray and laboratory technicians and medical assistants were on call 24 hours a day and 10 doctors and health inspectors spent 80 hours insuring adequate sanitation and hygiene at all residences and venues.

MEDICAL REPORT

Doctors, nurses and physiotherapists were on duty at all times and 2246 treatments were given to 646 people for a total of 674 complaints and injuries. Contusions and strains headed the list of maladies.

Clinics, or "sick parade" were held each morning from 10 a.m. until noon and the Village hospital also provided drug dispensing and physiotherapy services when needed.

The Department of National Defense had Medical Officers and staff on duty 24 hours a day at the 28-bed Pan-Am Village Hospital and set up a Village Dental Clinic to deal with emergency cases.

Pharmaceutical and Surgical supply companies generously donated more than $20,500 worth of supplies and visiting medical staffs were given whatever medical or surgical supplies they asked for.

CONGRESS ON SPORTS MEDICINE

The International Congress on Sports Medicine was held July 24 - 25 at the Medical College of the University of Manitoba with medical men from around the world renowned for their work in sports medicine presenting papers to overflow crowds of interested fellow physicians and lay people.

Simultaneously the Canadian Medical Association held a Canadian Association of Sports Sciences meeting to promote the scientific aspects of sports.

The committee in charge of the Congress on Sports Medicine has strongly recommended that such meetings be held in conjunction with future Pan-American Games so that this program will grow to be of benefit to overall health of the general population and the specific requirements of athletes.

The duties of the committees in this group ranged from organizing the Torch Relay Ceremony to bring the Olympic torch from St. Paul, Minnesota to the Stadium, to looking after all ceremonies except the formal opening and closing of the Games; the reception of important visitors; and all music used at the Games — including the dance bands needed for Village dances.

The musical scores of the National Anthems of all competing nations were obtained, reproduced and taped for use at Flag Raising Ceremonies at the Villages and for medal presentations at all venues.

SPORTS BOARD

The Organizing Committee hoped to realize much more than new facilities, valuable though these facilities would be, from the experience or having the Pan-American Games take place in Winnipeg. This Committee needed the help of thousands of Manitobans to make the Games "the best ever held." Volunteers did offer their services by the thousands, but most of them had virtually no experience in sport at all. Few Manitobans had ever even attended an international sport event of such magnitude; fewer still had participated either as athletes, officials or coaches. The Organizing Committee realized that if such men and women could be trained their new knowledge and experience would be a fixed asset for Canada — as real and as important as the new and renovated facilities.

The sport groups that existed in the province in 1965 were small, accustomed to working with small problems; small budgets and minor facilities. Suddenly these groups were to be ballooned into full-fledged committees fully conversant with the latest in international sports requirements, facilities and rules and capable of handling their sport in the largest Games ever staged in North America.

Under a "Sports Board" chaired by Jack Hopwood, a committee on each sport was set up with a small nucleous of people who had had several years of local experience and to whom was fed all of the new material and international experience that the Headquarter Staff could lay its hands on. Then, volunteers were brought into each group, some with specialized experience in promotion, ticket-selling, transportation etc. Thus, by starting to work years before the Games were held, calling meetings at first monthly and then weekly, and spurred by the tremendous challenge that faced them, the committees on each sport made themselves ready for the job ahead.

Thousands of details had to be identified, sorted out and dealt with and hundreds of decisions, both large and small, continually faced each of the individual sport groups and the main Sports Board.

For example, thousands of entry forms and result cards were needed for the two weeks of competition, with some sports requiring as many as 20 different forms. Each committee had to decide on what was needed, design its own material and arrange for printing and distribution months before competition started.

Months in advance, too, sports officials arranged for their own dress uniforms and scores of volunteers bought special Pan-Am gold blazers with dark brown trousers, or dark shirts, and white sports hats . . . the mark of a "Pan-Am man or woman" . . for the duration of the Games.

THE SPORTS BOARD AT WORK:

Because personal experience in sports organization was hard to come by, the Winnipeg organizers had to rely on written records of past Olympic, Pan-Am and British Empire Games, filling in the blank spaces with common sense solutions of possible problems. Written records of previous Pan-American Games were particularly sketchy and the official experiences of Brazil,

Chicago or Mexico could not be transplanted holus-bolus to Canada. Much of the organization work which made the Games so successful was initiated by members of the Sports Board. It was this board which had jurisdiction over programming of the various sports; ordered the equipment for the efficient running of all events and provided visiting competitors and officials with everything they needed for practice and competition sessions.

Each host city has been given latitude in solving local problems of sports presentation. This has included the deciding of the number of competitions to be presented, and the competition time most convenient for the competing athlete and the interested spectator.

Winnipeg planners kept the anticipated needs of the athlete uppermost and recognizing that competitors appreciated an interested audience, also considered the working hours and habits of the expected spectators along with the requirements of the international sports governing bodies with whom the organizing committee kept in constant touch. All of this resulted in a competitive schedule which satisfied as many of the various requirements as possible.

Months before the Games began, attempts were made to get some idea of the number of athletes who would be entered in the various sports. Some countries responded to the requests for information immediately; others were vague and uninformative. By constantly reshuffling figures and comparing them to the gradual growth of the Games, numbers were arrived at by the Organizing Committee of the Sports Board which proved to be fairly accurate.

However, the actual number of teams competing in some sports was not known until the athletes began to arrive in Winnipeg, resulting in reshuffling of some of the team competitions. Final reports from the Committee involved stated that this could only be resolved by insisting that each National Olympic Committee decide on its team sport entry earlier and guarantee the host country the actual number of participants.

Timing is always an essential and important part of any international sport event. In 1967 the Omega Watch Company of Switzerland provided timing equipment and judging assistance at the various sports locations and organizers say it is not possible to say enough about the contribution of this company and its highly qualified staff of Swiss technicians. During the Games there was virtually no ill feeling about judges' decisions as the timing devices and camera eye satisfied athletes that the final decisions were fair and unaffected by human error. Much has been written about the value of international Games with respect to the building of goodwill between athletes and different countries and even the timing equipment made a large contribution to the goodwill established in Winnipeg in 1967.

Performances in the 1967 Games showed a dramatic rise in the level of competition proving that there is a wealth of talent in the Western Hemisphere not yet properly harnessed. Future Pan-American Games may well be on a more competitive level with the world Olympiad.

SPORTS OFFICE

During the Games a special Sports Office was established in Pan-Am Village to help solve problems and to take care of minor requests from team managers or chefs de mission. Enthusiastic volunteers were on hand at the office to handle the problems and requests and by the time competition actually began, the competitors said that they were experiencing a feeling of well being as a result of the fine food and facilities and the enthusiastic response of local committee members. The tennis player who needed another towel while practising was amazed to discover that the person who ran to get him what he wanted was not a paid staff member but some businessman who was taking time off to roll up his sleeves and run errands for the visitors and the team manager who arrived at the office door to ask for last minute help was astonished to find that the person who came to his aid was a top flight executive from an insurance company who had volunteered to spend his holidays in the Sports Office.

"AMIGO SERVICE"

A special "Amigo Service" went into effect at Games time to help all of the Spanish-speaking visitors. Athletes were told that if at any time during their stay in Winnipeg they got lost, they were to go to the nearest telephone, dial "O", and ask the operator for the "Amigo Service", which would immediately put them in contact with the Pan-Am Village.

ENTRY FORMS

Thousands of entry forms, fully documented and certified, were shipped air freight early in May 1967. Only four countries belonging to PASO and eligible to compete, the Dominican Republic, Haiti, Honduras and Surinam, did not send teams.

INTERNATIONAL RULES

Seventy-five up-to-date rule books were ordered from each international sports governing body for the competition.

SPORTS EQUIPMENT

An equipment storage depot was set up in April of 1967 to receive and store equipment.

MEDALS

Twelve hundred winning athletes mounted the dais at the 17 sites during the two weeks of competition to accept the traditional gold, silver and bronze medals which denoted the first, second and third placings in the more than 400 events scheduled.

Designed and made of a special rare bronze, the winning medals were cast with gold, silver and bronze finishes with a symbol of the Pan-American Games International Organization, the Fifth Pan-Am Games Symbol, and the laurel wreath of victory on one side and a Manitoba bison and the words "Winnipeg Manitoba 1967" on the other.

Every athlete entered in the Games was presented with a commemorative medal with the Pan-American Games international torch on one side, the Fifth Pan-American Games symbol, the Canadian Centennial symbol and the date 1867-1967 on the other.

Now, On To Cali:

The 1967 Pan-American Games go down in sports history as the Games which had the most contestants, the most volunteers and the most spectators. Women had their first chance at international officiating in Winnipeg and swimmers showed their appreciation of the spanking new Pan-Am Pool by setting 26 new Pan-Am records and 13 new world records—the most ever set at any one Games, including Olympics, anytime, anywhere.

As the impressive final ceremonies officially closed the Fifth Pan American Games, plans were going ahead for the Sixth Games, awarded to Cali, Colombia, by PASO. Cali organizers had been interested spectators in Winnipeg; now, they are preparing to get down to the business of organizing the next Pan-American Games spectacle.

When the time came to say good-bye, Winnipeggers bid farewell to new-found friends from all over the western hemisphere. Invitations to come back to Winnipeg soon were extended to athletes, officials and visitors, who responded with invitations of their own to Canadians to visit all parts of the Americas.

Young Canadians, many of them who had seen international sport for the first time in their lives were ready to return to their homes across the country, proud of sport and the heroes it had produced; proud, too, of their country and the Games it had hosted.

Everyone, young and old, athlete and spectator, joined in the final singing of "Auld Lang Syne" and the shouts resounded from side to side, "See you in Cali".

THE OLYMPIC CUP:

Shortly after the Games were over the International Olympic Committee honored the organizing body by awarding it The Olympic Cup for its work on the Fifth Pan-American Games. The Cup, instituted by the Baron de Coubertin in 1906 is awarded "to an institution or association with a general reputation for merit and integrity which has been active and efficient in the service of amateur sport and has contributed substantially to the development of the Olympic Movement".

The Cup remains at Campagne Mon-Repos but PASO headquarters in Mexico City has a bronze plaque and a diploma to commemorate the presentation.
